

HOGGART, William Ross, -, Quinn's Post
Source 138, page 57, notes 8

Quinn's Post

"The newcomers took up the challenge and a volley of shots stopped the enemy advance in its tracks. Other soldiers scattered in the vicinity then joined the men of the 14th to consolidate the position. Major Robert Rankine of A company took charge. As the men dug in, machine-gun and rifle fire arrived from unexpected angles. Captain Bill Hoggart, a Victorian schoolteacher, rose on his knees, field glasses in hand, to try to make some sense of it. He was shot through the head."